WORKOUT

Warming up and cooling down are important stages of your workout and so these exercises should begin and end your every workout session. Warming up and stretching out your muscles prepares your body for more strenuous exercise, increases your circulation and heart rate, and allows for more oxygen to reach all parts of your body.

Basic usage

Simply fill the portable water bag with water and you'll find yourself with readily available weight training device anytime, anywhere. Working out with flowing water will strengthen your muscles and help you find the weakest parts of your body.

Swing up and down

Hold the water bag at your side and level with your knee. Then move it from your side upwards and diagonally above your head. Then slowly lower the bag down to be level with your other knee by following the movement of the flowing water.

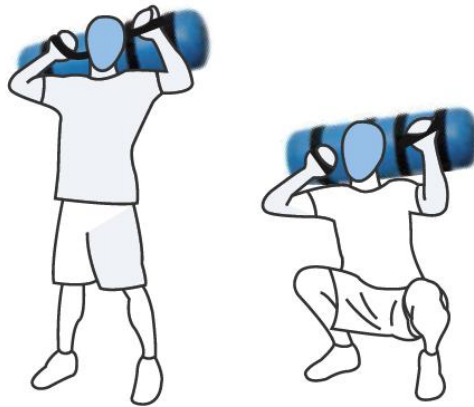

Front squat

Place the bag on your chest and grip the side handles with palms facing out, the bag resting in the crook of your elbows. Start squatting.

Back squat

Hold the bag behind your head by the straps with palms facing out. The straps must be behind your head also. Start squatting.

Hang

Part your legs so that they are parallel with your shoulders. Place the bag between your feet. Bend forward with straight back and stretched arms and take hold of the bag. Raise it up to knee height by standing on tiptoes. Look forward, lift the bag up and lock out your arms overhead. Bend your knees slightly to ensure your spine is straight in the lumbar area.
